

Many know Kimberly Williams-Paisley as an award-winning actress and director or as wife of country-music star Brad Paisley. Then in 2014, she wrote an article for Redbook magazine that revealed a tragic secret: her mother was diagnosed with a rare form of dementia at age sixty-one.

Here she tells the full story of her mother's illness, called primary progressive aphasia, from diagnosis through the present day, drawing on memories of her relationship with her fascinating, complicated, and successful mother. She describes educating herself about the condition, letting go of the shame and secrecy surrounding it, and finding unexpected humor and grace in a terrible situation. She chronicles ways in which her family's bond was strengthened by the experience, to becoming an awareness advocate, to accepting the woman her mother has become. This is a heartrending and inspiring reminder of how unbreakable our relationships with our mothers are.

"Kimberly...turn[ed] her family's crisis into an opportunity to inspire and educate others."

—Jane Seymour, Emmy Award-winning actress
