

Avalon Dale is a masterful grifter. She researches her victims thoroughly, kidnaps and sedates them, cleans out their bank accounts, and uses injections and hair clippers to change their appearances so that when they wake up, they can't easily prove who they are. For her last great score, Avalon's targeted Primrose Meath, and then she'll fade away to a life of ease and luxury—something she's dreamed of since a very tough childhood.

On paper, Prim is the perfect target: wealthy, workaholic, and distracted by her cheating husband. But when Avalon finds Prim's husband dead, she can't escape so easily—not when she's been mistaken for Prim who's now wanted for murder. The two women—opposites, enemies—are suddenly on the run together and must learn to get along—and to depend on each other—in order to get away. And then, what starts as a cat-and-mouse run to the coast of England becomes a fight for their survival.

Harmless Women is a pulse-pounding, thought-provoking thriller that illuminates the fortitude and resilience of women and heralds the arrival of an innovative new writer.

Rebecca Sharpe wanted to write novels from the moment she read her first Stephen King book, age eight, and soon graduated to the works of Susan Hill, Shirley Jackson, and Wilkie Collins, with a healthy sprinkling of The Baby-Sitters Club along the way. After reading her way through the entire classics section of the school library, she went on to study English literature at university, which cemented her ambition to become an author. When not reading or writing, she can be found mentoring new writers through the Faber Academy or walking her dog, Archie, through the Mendip Hills.
