

Twelve-year-old Sadie Hahn didn't plan to eat grubs on camera to win a contest. And she definitely didn't plan to win first prize: a guest appearance on a YouTube show hosted by America's favorite thirteen-year-old survivalist Radley Shaw. But she'll do anything to cheer up her little brother Silas, who's too young to qualify.

Rad has millions of followers and exactly zero real-life friends, so the contest is a great chance for him to hang out with kids his own age. But it's hate at first sight when Silas throws a wrench in his plan and Sadie decides Rad is just a clueless poser who doesn't know the first thing about survival.

Disaster strikes when their scripted rafting trip turns into a real fight for survival. Lost in the mountains, Rad and Sadie must find shelter, build a fire, forage for food, and try not to become food for a hungry predator. But can they stop bickering long enough to hack it in the wilderness? And will that be enough to keep them alive?

JOSLIN BRORSEN lives in Oklahoma with her husband and five children, who make sure life is never boring (or quiet)! She draws inspiration from walking in nature, wrangling her kooky family, and, of course, the books she loved as a child. Joslin also cares deeply about featuring characters with nonvisible disabilities and diseases in her books so that readers like her—and so many of the people she loves—can embrace their main character energy. Wilderness Hacks is her first novel.
