Jeffrey Burds THE SECOND OLDEST PROFESSION

A World History of Espionage
Part One

Professor Jeffrey Burds of Northeastern University delves into the history of espionage in this eye-opening lecture series. The course opens with espionage activity in the ancient world and the Roman Empire and continues with the American Revolution, Age of Napoleon, and American Civil War. Throughout this compelling discussion it becomes evident that spying is not only a never-ending source of fascination but also a major contributor to world history and the development of nations.

Jeffrey Burds is an associate professor of Russian and Soviet history at Northeastern University in Boston, where he teaches a course on the history of espionage, on the history of the KGB, and on spying in World War II.
