

Max Monroe WHERE I SHOULD'VE BEEN

Red Bridge, Book 3

Narrated by Lee Samuels and Summer Morton

SMALL TOWN. BIG SECRETS. AND ONE RIDICULOUSLY HOT MISTAKE SHE DOESN'T REGRET.

Everyone in the small town of Red Bridge, Vermont, knows Tad Hanson, the hot sheep farmer who can't control his flock. He doesn't believe in forever, but he'll be the best time you've ever had—right now. What they don't know is why.

He's too charming, too good with that addicting smile of his, too committed to keeping his dark past buried, and too stubborn to imagine his life could be any other way.

Until a snowstorm—and one beautiful woman—sends his carefully controlled world spinning.

Successful art director Beatrice "Breezy" Bishop thought she had life figured out—until her father gave her the middle finger from the grave and left the family galleries she built to her entitled younger brother. With nothing left in New York but resentment and regret, she temporarily heads to Red Bridge, looking for space to breathe.

Instead, she finds a sexy, flirty, secret fling with Tad, and a rivalry with the editor of Red Bridge's newspaper. It's chaotic, but it's the happiest she's ever been.

But secrets never stay secrets for long, and when hearts get involved—and the universe clearly has other plans—walking away isn't as easy as they thought.
